International Conference on Tourism, Climate Change and Sustainability

13-14 September 2012

School of Tourism, Bournemouth University, UK

The International Centre for Tourism and Hospitality Research (ICTHR), Bournemouth University is pleased to announce this conference with an aim to debate the broader conceptual ideas and contested relationships between climate change, sustainability and tourism as well as to examine worldwide responses and exchange cutting-edge research.

Themes for abstracts

Advancements in sustainable tourism; climate change and sustainability - common ground; indicators and planning; green knowledge economy; ecosystem services; small island developing states; sea-level rise; natural disasters; protected areas and heritage conservation; road transport and aviation; hospitality and green issues; greenhouse gases; climate change adaptation; climate change mitigation; emerging techniques; and future research implications.

Based on the extended abstracts submitted, participants will be invited to make presentations in break-out sessions on conceptual issues related to climate change, sustainability and tourism; responses and initiatives of regional, national and international agencies; and emerging techniques and research implications.

We are also pleased to announce that some of the leading publishers will be present throughout the duration of the conference to meet with delegates and discuss future publishing opportunities.

Organisers

Dr Vijay Reddy and Dr Keith Wilkes

This conference will feature keynote presentations from high-level policy makers from international agencies, leading research organisations and the private sector and will provide an excellent opportunity for participants to exchange knowledge and network with delegates.
